Project: Measuring outcomes and value in rehabilitation

You are invited to take part in rehabilitation research.

What is this research about?

We want to learn what people think of rehabilitation and what makes it successful. We also want to know what data and information to collect to measure this. This will help us to develop a minimum dataset for rehabilitation services.

Who can be involved?

- Consumer representatives working with organisations who support people accessing rehabilitation services

What will I need to do?

You can participate in online group discussions about rehabilitation outcomes.

If you aren't familiar with Zoom, we will make a time to help you with the technology before the event.

Health professionals and managers will also be at these discussions.

A speech pathologist will be there to help you if needed.

You can also have someone else with you for support.

When and where will the research take place?

The group discussions will be held between June and July 2020. The exact dates and times are yet to be determined, and will be planned around the availability of interested participants where possible.

How long will it take?

The group discussion will take about one and a half (1.5) hours.

Please note: At this stage we are just determining interest in participating, and further information will be provided to you in due course. Registering your interest to participate does not mean you are obliged to participate if you change your mind or are unable to participate.

This research has been submitted for approval from the research ethics committees at RBWH, the University of Queensland and Griffith University.

Who do I contact to register my interest in this research?

Please contact Amandine Barnett, project officer, Griffith Uni.
